Profile: Harvey Gold

"My love affair with photography began at age 11 when I received a Kodak Brownie camera as a gift," says Harvey. While in college, Harvey taught photography to kids at summer camp; today he is teaching it to his 10-year old grandson Scott. He recently gave a class at Scott's school to help the kids enter the national PTA photo contest.

"I let kids explore with their camera and photograph what they want. Digital cameras make it easy, so they learn quickly. But these technical tools haven't changed the elements of a good photo," Harvey adds.

Raised in the Bronx, in the shadow of Yankee Stadium, Harvey is a life-long Yankee fan. He recalls seeing Jackie Robertson play his first World Series game where he was seated next to the DiMaggio family!

Harvey moved to California 37-years ago to build his career in the semi-conductor industry. He worked with Teledyne, then HP and finally to Quantum before retiring. "During my career, I was privileged to be responsible for a group pioneering in digital photography," he adds.

"When I retired, I joined the Camera Club. When my wife and I travel by car, she does the research and navigating: I take the shots. Now my biggest challenge is to find the time to process all the pictures I take."
