

Music is sound and vibration and rhythm and beat. It is only visible when we see it transmitted through the facial and bodily expressions of a musician. It seems that as a musician is fully imbued with music in his or her brain and plays the instrument that we, as an audience, actually see those feelings as they are produced. They move rapidly, shifting expressions across a face and changing body posture. It is as though the music is playing the artist. We can observe concentration, oneness with the instrument, listening for the correct sounds, and almost always at the end, the pleasure of fulfillment.

Susan Anawalt